1. Introduction

Mapping Palestinian Politics provides an interactive overview of the main Palestinian political institutions and players in Palestine, Israel, and the diaspora. Its goal is to provide an easy-to-use, scene-setting resource for researchers, journalists, and policymakers ahead of significant transformations to the Palestinian political order centred around the anticipated departure of Mahmoud Abbas in the near term.

Since succeeding Yasser Arafat as Palestinian leader in 2004, Abbas has consolidated his grip on power within the Palestinian Authority (PA), the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), and Fatah. Over the years, Abbas has steadily purged or constrained his political rivals, monopolised the various Palestinian decision-making processes, and pursued increasingly authoritarian measures to stifle dissent and shrink the space for Palestinian democracy and popular participation. This political fragmentation and fragility has been compounded by continued infighting between Fatah and Hamas and the ensuing political and geographic separation between the West Bank and Gaza.

Unsurprisingly, Palestinian public confidence in traditional Palestinian governance structures continues to decline, confronting Palestinian institutions, Abbas’s presidency, and the PA with an unprecedented crisis of legitimacy. Moreover, both Fatah and Hamas – both considered the most dominant Palestinian political parties – have seen a similar decline in popular support. This shift is particularly noticeable among Palestinian youth, who have become increasingly alienated from Palestinian politics and elites.

The ever-present backdrop to Palestinian political fragmentation, of course, remains Israel’s prolonged occupation of Palestinian territory and enactment of policies designed to weaken and divide the Palestinian liberation movement. The result is that, while the Palestinian liberation movement remains united around a unifying vision of ending the occupation, it is currently in disarray over how to achieve this following the failure of the Oslo peace process launched in 1993. This is taking place, even as different elements vie with each other to succeed Abbas as president of the PA, chairman of the PLO, and head of the ruling Fatah party.

Crucially, there are no institutional mechanisms currently able to manage the upcoming PA leadership transition given that Israeli policies and intra-Palestinian splits for now preclude legislative and presidential elections. Meanwhile, Abbas's marginalisation of the PLO's Executive Committee and Fatah's Central Committee, and concentration of power within his person, further challenges the ability of the PLO and Fatah to ensure a smooth leadership transition. This democratic atrophication of the nascent Palestinian state – combined with growing popular frustration, shrinking diplomatic horizons for achieving an end to Israel's occupation, and humanitarian pressures in Gaza – is feeding an increasingly volatile situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT).

This 'map' charts Palestinian political actors in order to help understand where people may turn for organisation and leadership in the post-Abbas period. It is based on research, including publicly available resources and literature, as well as discussions with experts and academics. It aims to give a big-picture view but should not be considered comprehensive or exhaustive. The resource will be periodically updated and expanded to reflect internal developments.

2. Geography

The creation of Israel in 1948 resulted in the geographic scattering of the Palestinian people. The displacement of around 700,000 Palestinians from the newly created state of Israel is commemorated by Palestinians as the Nakba (Catastrophe). Many of these refugees arrived in the West Bank, Gaza, and neighbouring countries (Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan).

Palestinian geography was further fragmented following the Arab defeat by Israel during the June 1967 (Six Day) war which saw Israeli forces occupy the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza. This sent a second wave of approximately 300,000 Palestinian refugees (half of whom were already refugees from 1948) towards neighbouring countries.

A third phase in Palestine's territorial fragmentation occurred during the Oslo peace process which carved up the West Bank according to various complex jurisdictional schemes under continued Israeli military control, and led to further Palestinian dispossession in East Jerusalem and Area C of the West Bank where Israeli settlements have steadily swallowed up Palestinian land.

These geographic divisions were accentuated by the intra-Palestinian fighting between Hamas and Fatah that erupted following the 2006 legislative election, and the subsequent imposition of a joint Egyptian-Israeli blockade on Hamas-controlled Gaza, limiting trade and movement with the West Bank.

Today, around 3 million Palestinian refugees and their descendants are scattered among refugee camps in Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan. A further estimated 2.5 million live elsewhere as a diaspora, particularly Europe, the United States, and Latin America. This is in addition to 1.8 million Palestinians in Israel, and a further 4.5 million in the OPT (2 million of whom are refugees) – for a total of 12 million Palestinians worldwide.

The Palestinian liberation movement – and its embodiment in the PLO – has reflected these geographical shifts and divisions. Since the 1967 war, the PLO has been variously headquartered in Amman, then Beirut, then Tunis, before returning to the OPT as part of the Oslo peace process. Doing this time, the centre of gravity within the Palestinian liberation movement has shifted from neighbouring refugee camps to the West Bank and Gaza.

As a result, distinct sociopolitical dynamics have arisen throughout the Palestinian population, depending on location. While some groups are now headquartered in the West Bank or Gaza, others such as Hamas continue to base a large portion of their leadership in the diaspora. Others still, such as the Syrian-based Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine – General Command (PFLP-GC), have been heavily co-opted by host governments. Meanwhile, in areas such as East Jerusalem and refugee camps, where the PA/PLO exercises either weak or non-existent control, autonomous leaderships have risen, creating their own distinct political dynamics. This political complexity combined with enduring physical separation and socio-economic backgrounds have weakened the Palestinian polity, making it harder for a unified and representative body to take root or articulate a coherent liberation strategy

Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT)

The OPT consists of the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza. Some 4.5 million Palestinians live in the OPT (2.7 million in the West Bank and 1.8 million in Gaza). The fulfilment of a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict would see the creation of a sovereign and unified Palestinian state on this area, with East Jerusalem as its capital, based on the pre-June 1967 lines (the borders that existed prior to Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza in June 1967).

Israel occupied the West Bank and Gaza during the 1967 war. Between 1967-1993, it administered the OPT through a system of Palestinian "Village Leagues". The launch of the 1993 Oslo peace process between Israel and the PLO, however, led to their replacement with a newly created Palestinian Authority (PA), the return of the previously exiled PLO, and a shift in the Palestinian liberation movement's centre of gravity, away from the refugee camps and diaspora, to the OPT.

The 1993 Oslo Accords have resulted in the gradual fragmentation of the OPT. As part of a four-year interim phase supposedly leading to a final status agreement, the West Bank was divided into three areas with differing jurisdictional arrangements: Area C (17.2 per cent) under full PA control; Area B (23.8 percent) under PA civil control and Israeli security control; and Area C (59 per cent) under full Israeli control. The Oslo peace process also saw a surge in Israeli settlement building. Today, the West Bank is perforated by over 100 Israeli civilian settlements, dozens of "outposts" and military bases, along with a network of restricted roads and checkpoints. In total, over 588,000 Israeli settlers reside in the OPT.

The West Bank and Gaza have been politically split since the intra-Palestinian fighting that erupted after Hamas's victory in the 2006 legislative election. Since then, Hamas has controlled Gaza, while the PA remains in the West Bank. This has resulted in the emergence of two parallel systems of Palestinian governance, despite numerous intra-Palestinian reconciliation attempts. Gaza has also been under an Israeli air, sea, and land blockade since then, limiting the ability of Palestinians to travel and trade with the West Bank, and creating severe social, economic, and humanitarian hardships for Gazans.

Palestinian citizens of Israel

Palestinian citizens of Israel have had the right to vote in Israeli elections since the first Israeli elections in 1949. During military rule until 1966, Palestinian representation was largely organised through the Communist party or satellite factions allied with Israeli Jewish parties. The first independent Arab party that ran for the Knesset, Al-Ard, was outlawed by the Israeli government in 1964. The Abnaa al-Balad movement (Sons of the Village), which promoted a secular nationalist ideology, encouraged a boycott of Israeli elections.

The Israeli Palestinian community's politics is multi-faceted with communist, socialist, nationalist, religious, secular, feminist, and other streams of thought. They generally share a common platform of promoting a "state for all its citizens". Although Arab parties are largely focused on political matters inside Israel, since the 1990s they have more strongly asserted their simultaneous connections to the wider Palestinian cause and the Palestinian leadership.

Palestinian political figures frequently face efforts by Israeli authorities and Jewish parliamentarians to limit their political rights. These include motions to disqualify Arab parties from running in the election; criminal indictments by police against Arab politicians for participating in demonstrations; and a new law allowing 80 Knesset members (out of 120) to expel their colleagues from the parliament, among others.

Joint List

The Joint List was formed in 2015 as a united slate of the four main Arab political parties in Israel: Hadash (Arab-Jewish, communist), Balad (Palestinian nationalist), Ra'am (Islamist), and Ta'al (Arab nationalist). The List is currently the third largest party in the Knesset with 13 seats, and is headed by Ayman Odeh (Hadash), a lawyer from Haifa.

Although there have been long-standing calls for the Arab factions to unify, the impetus for the List's creation was a new law enacted in March 2014 that raised the Israeli electoral threshold from 2 percent to 3.25 percent – a measure deliberately designed in part to make it more difficult for the smaller Arab parties to enter the Knesset.

The Joint List has increased the public profile and political engagement of Arab parliamentary members, and has boosted its international advocacy including in the United States and the European Union. However, the List also faces various internal disputes, including over seat rotations, political language, and partnerships with left-wing Jewish parties.

Islamic Movement (Northern Branch)

The Islamic Movement in Israel split into two branches in 1996 over its decision to stand candidates for the Knesset. The southern branch formed the Ra'am party (now part of the Joint List), while the northern branch continues to boycott elections. The northern branch – led by Raed Salah – is said to have links with Hamas and the Muslim Brotherhood.

In November 2015, the Israeli government issued an executive order under the 1945 Emergency Regulations that outlawed the northern Islamic Movement and 17 associated NGOs. The Murabitat and Murabitoun, a collective established by the movement to 'defend' Al-Aqsa, were also outlawed.

High Follow-Up Committee

Established in 1982, the High Follow-Up Committee (HFC) is an extra-parliamentary organisation that acts as a national coordinating and representative body for Palestinian citizens of Israel. Its membership is drawn from the National Council of the Heads of Arab Localities, the Arab political parties in the Knesset, Arab civil society organisations, and others. It is currently headed by Mohammad Barakeh, a former Knesset member for Hadash.

Decisions in the HFC are reached by consensus and organised through various sub-committees. In 2006-2007, it facilitated the creation of the Future Vision Document, which articulated the Palestinian citizens' demand for Israel to become a 'state for all its citizens'. However, the HFC has been criticised in recent years for being ineffective and offering few actions aside from general strikes.

Israel refuses to recognise the HFC as a representative body, viewing it as an attempt to establish political autonomy outside of the state's institutions; the subsequent pressure from Israeli authorities has prevented the HFC from renewing its leadership.

Jerusalem

Jerusalem is at the centre of the Palestinian liberation movement, and where it first developed in the late 1920s. But Palestinian factions, and the PLO, currently have a very minimal presence in the city.

Jerusalem was emptied of Palestinian political forces, first by Jordan after the 1948 war, and then by Israel after the 1967 war. It experienced some political revival in the 1990s after the launch of the Oslo peace process allowed the PLO to establish a presence in the city. During the Second Intifada, however, Israel expelled the PLO from Jerusalem and closed its headquarters in the city – the “Orient House”. In 2011 Israel expelled four Hamas PLC members from the city: Muhammad Totah, Ahmad Atoun, Muhammad Abu Tir, and Khaled Abu Arafah, a former Palestinian minister for Jerusalem affairs.

Residents have recently shown the ability to mobilise in resistance to what they see as the “Israelisation” of the city. Most notable is the movement led by youth and supported by religious institutions in the city (including the Waqf, the Mufti, Sharia Courts, and the Islamic Higher Council) to block Israel from installing security structures at the gates of Al-Aqsa mosque in March 2017.

Refugee camps

The majority of Palestinians – around 5 million – are refugees. About one-third of the Palestinian refugee population are spread out across 58 UNRWA-administered camps in the OPT, Jordan, Lebanon, and Syria.

While UNRWA administers health, education, and other services in the camps, refugees organise themselves politically through popular committees. Refugee staff of UNRWA are organised within the Local Staff Union and regularly mobilise against UNRWA reduction of their employment or services in the camps.

Palestinian political movements and factions emerged from the refugee camps, and continue to serve as recruiting grounds and as locations of political contestation. In the OPT, the camps played a major role in the resistance against the Israeli occupation in the First and Second Intifadas. Recent years have seen PA security forces clash in refugee camps such Jenin and Balata, allegedly with Fatah activists loyal to Mohammed Dahlan.

Although Palestinian factions such as Fatah and Hamas maintain a strong presence in refugee camps in Lebanon (outside of Lebanese security control) these have however witnessed the rise of Salafi-jihadist factions such as Fatah al-Islam.

3. Institutions

The Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) was established in 1964. Over the years, it grew to embody the Palestinian national liberation movement and become the sole and legitimate representative of Palestinians everywhere.

The PLO's power was eclipsed by the creation of the Palestinian National Authority – more commonly referred to as the PA (PA) – in 1993, following the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self Government (the Oslo Accords) signed between the PLO and the government of Israel. The PA was established as an interim administrative organisation that nominally governs parts of the West Bank and Gaza, and whose role is restricted according to the PLO's agreements with Israel. In theory, the PA is subordinate to and derives its legitimacy from the PLO.

Following the signing of the Oslo Accords, the PLO formed the now defunct 'Council of the Palestinian National Authority' and appointed Yasser Arafat as the chairman of the Council. This arrangement, which was the first step in the creation of the PA, has formed the institutional basis of Palestinian politics to this day, whereby the head of the largest Palestinian faction, Fatah, operates as chairman of the PLO and as president of the PA. Since Arafat's death in 2004, these three positions have remained in the hands of his successor, Mahmoud Abbas.

In 2006, the Islamic Resistance Movement, Hamas, won the PA's PLC election. In response to his rivals' victory, Abbas reactivated the PLO's status and institutions to regain power and assert legitimacy, including by launching a diplomatic campaign to make Palestine a non-member state at the United Nations. More recently, the PLO has been the main institution responding to the US declaration of Jerusalem as Israel's capital and its cutting of aid to the Palestinians.

These latest activities within the PLO have so far precluded any serious attempt to fully revive and reform the crumbling institution, despite many Palestinian voices calling for such efforts. The PLO remains very weak and the PA, while enjoying the appearance of a developing state, lacks sovereignty and is increasingly seen by Palestinians as serving the interests of the Israeli occupation rather than the aspirations of the Palestinian people.

Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO)

The Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) was founded in 1964 during the first Arab League summit in Cairo. In 1974, it was officially recognised by the Arab League and the United Nations General Assembly as the "sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people", and was invited to participate in all UN activities under observer status. In 1988, it endorsed a two-state solution to the conflict with Israel. Since 2012, the PLO sits at the UN as a non-member state, Palestine, and is a signatory to UN treaties as well as agreements with Israel.

The PLO had been successively headquartered in Jordan (from its establishment until the Black September confrontation with Jordan in 1970-71); in Lebanon (until its expulsion by Israel in 1982); and in Tunis (until its return to the OPT following the signing of the Oslo Accords in 1993).

The PLO comprises various political factions (excluding Hamas and Islamic Jihad) and is organised into three bodies: (i) the Palestinian National Council \(PNC\), a parliamentary body that is elected by Palestinians everywhere except for Palestinian citizens of Israel; (ii) the Central Council, a 124-member decision-making body elected by members of the PNC; and (iii) the 18-member Executive Committee, which is elected by the Central Council and which in turn elects the chairman of the PLO.

The PLO is governed internally by its Basic Law, which outlines the powers and relations between the organs of the PLO.

Palestinian National Council (PNC)

The Palestinian National Council (PNC) is the legislative authority within the PLO, and is responsible for formulating the organisation's policies. It acts as a parliament that represents all Palestinians, except for Palestinian citizens of Israel. The PNC currently comprises 740 members representing Palestinians in Palestine and the diaspora. Despite not being members of the PLO, Hamas and Islamic Jihad representatives are invited to attend PNC meetings as observers (although they usually refuse).

According to its bylaws, the PNC must meet annually and can hold special meetings (without a full quorum) as needed. In practice, though, it last convened a full meeting in 1996, in Gaza.

A full quorum of the PNC is expected to meet on 30 April 2018 in Ramallah to elect a new PLO Central Council (which will in turn elect a new PLO Executive Committee). This is seen as a step towards designating a successor to Abbas as chairman of the PLO.

The scattering of the Palestinian people and Israel's occupation has made it difficult to organise direct elections for the PNC. Instead, a quota system was put in place whereby factions appoint members to the body in proportion to the size of their support base. This makes Fatah the most dominant faction, followed by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP). Unions and groups also appoint their own representatives to the PNC.

The PNC adopted the Palestinian National Charter in 1964 and another new charter in 1968. It was amended again in 1996 to comply with the PLO's acceptance of the Oslo peace process formally launched in 1993. This initiated internal strife within the PLO due to many members' opposition to the agreements (Edward Said, the famous scholar and activist, left the PNC because he believed the Oslo Accords undermined Palestinian refugees' right to return to their homes in pre-1967 Israel). In 1998, the PNC convened in Gaza to amend articles within the Charter in accordance with new requirements under the Oslo Accords, including recognition of Israel; the meeting, which was boycotted by many members, was addressed by then-US president Bill Clinton.

Many Palestinians see the PNC as the most important democratic institution through which the Palestinian national movement can be revived. Recent efforts to reactivate the PNC, such as the PNC Register Campaign, are widely supported by Palestinians both inside and outside the OPT. The revival of the PNC is also a central subject in the current Palestinian national reconciliation efforts.

There are currently an estimated 740 members of the Palestinian National Council (PNC), including all members of the Palestinian Legislative Council (PLC) and PLO Executive Committee (EC). Key figures are listed below. (full profiles can be found in the annex.)

1. Salim Zanoun (Speaker/Shairman)
2. *Tayseer Quba'a (Deputy Speaker) ***
3. Constantine Kormosh (Deputy Chairman)
4. Mohammad Sbieh (Secretary General)
5. Marwan Ali Muna al-Sa'di (Deputy Secretary General)

Palestinian Central Council (PCC)

Because of the difficulties in convening the full PNC, the Palestinian Central Council (CC) was established in 1973 to function as an intermediary body between the PNC and the PLO's Executive Committee.

The Palestinian Central Council convened in January 2018 following the US decision to recognise Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. As a response to the US decision, the PCC called on the Executive Committee to suspend the recognition of Israel until it recognises Palestine as a state, to suspend PA security coordination with Israel, and to work on a multilateral international approach to resolving the conflict.

Since April 1996, the Palestinian Central Council has consisted of 124 members drawn from the EC, the PNC, and the PLC. PCC meetings are chaired by the PNC chairman.

1. Salim Zanoun (Chairman)

Executive Committee (EC)

The Executive Committee (EC) is the primary executive organ of the PLO and represents the organisation at the international level. Its main function is to execute the policies and decisions set out by the PNC and the CC, and is responsible for adopting a budget. Each member of the EC is responsible for overseeing the functioning of the PLO's departments, similar to the role of ministers. Decisions of the EC are taken by a simple majority.

In September 2009 the EC appointed Mahmoud Abbas as chairman. During the same meeting, the prime minister of the PA was made permanent observer at EC meetings -- in effect establishing an institutional connection between the PLO and PA. Abbas has further sought to solidify his hold over the EC, including by freezing funds to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine in 2016 following their increased criticism of his policies, especially regarding security coordination with Israel.

The EC has 18 members, including its chairman, and is elected by and responsible to the PNC.

In August 2015, 11 members of the EC announced their resignations: Abbas; Amira; Ashrawi; Erekat; Ismail Ali; Kaddoumi; al-Khoudary; Majdalani; al-Nashashibi; Abd al-Rahman; and Shakaa (who has since died). These have yet to be accepted (or rejected), pending a meeting of the PNC, currently expected to take place on 30 April 2018 in Ramallah.

Palestinian analysts and political rivals have dismissed the significance of these resignations as a "play". According to Masarat's Hani Masri: "Those who reportedly submitted their resignations have no intention to leave. They just want to use the resignations to call for an extraordinary meeting of the Palestinian National Council in accordance with Article 14 of the Palestinian Basic Law.”

Current members of the EC are:

1. Mahmoud Abbas (Chairman)
2. Saeb Erekat (Secretary General)
3. Zakaria al-Agha
4. Mahmoud Ismail Ali
5. Hanna Afif Amira
6. Hanan Ashrawi
7. Ali Ishaq
8. Farouk Kaddoumi
9. Taysir Khaled
10. Riyad Hassan al-Khoudary
11. Ahmad Majdalani
12. Abdel Rahim Mallouh
13. Mohammad Zuhdi al-Nashashibi
14. Ahmed Qurei
15. Yasser Abed Rabbo
16. Saleh Ra'fat
17. Asaad Abd al-Rahman
18. *Ghassan Walid Shak'a ***

Palestinian Authority (PA)

The PA (PA) – formerly referred to as the Palestinian National Authority – is headed by the president, who sits on top of the executive branch which includes the Council of Ministers. In addition to the executive branch, the PA includes the PLC and justice system. Since the launch of the PLO's statehood strategy in 2011 the institutions of the PA have been at times been equated to those of the State of Palestine, although a degree of confusion exists over the exact relationship between the two.

The PA was established in 1994 as part of the Oslo peace process and it effectively allowed for the return of the PLO to the OPT. The PA has nominal control over both security-related and civilian matters in urban areas of the OPT (Area A), and only civilian control over Palestinian rural areas (Area B). The remainder of the territory, (Area C) which includes illegal Israeli settlements, bypass roads, and the Jordan Valley region, remains under full Israeli control.

With the support of the United States and the European Union, Mahmoud Abbas's Fatah attempted to sideline the Hamas-led government that emerged following the group's victory in the 2006 legislative election. This led to bloody infighting and the fracturing of the PA, and the geographic division of Palestine between a Hamas authority in Gaza and a Fatah authority in the West Bank. This division has become entrenched within Palestinian politics despite a number of reconciliation efforts over the years

Since 2007, Hamas has worked to develop its own institutions in Gaza, which include ministries, judicial systems, municipalities, and security forces; the Hamas parliamentary “Change and Reform” bloc in the PLC in Gaza has also remained active. Meanwhile, in the West Bank, the PA has gained extensive international support to build state institutions and acquire international legitimacy.

In June 2014, a National Accord Government was formed following an agreement between Fatah and Hamas. Abbas's decision to reshuffle the government in July 2015 without consulting Hamas led the Islamist group to withdraw its endorsement.

Reconciliation efforts in 2017-18 have since centred around returning governance of Gaza to the PA. This would be among the first in a series of steps aimed at convening new PA presidential and legislative elections, and reforming the PLO.

Executive

Presidency

The president of the PA (PA) is directly elected by Palestinians in the OPT for a five-year renewable term. The president is the commander-in-chief of the armed forces. According to the Basic Law, the president appoints a prime minister following nomination by the PLC. The president is also chief of the national security services.

1. Mahmoud Abbas (President)
2. Majdi al-Khalidi (Adviser for diplomatic affairs)
3. Mahmoud al-Habbash (Adviser on religious affairs)
4. Hassan al-Ouri (Adviser for legal affairs)
5. Tayeb Abdel Rahim (Secretary general)
6. Nabil Abu Rudeineh (Spokesperson)
7. Nabil Shaath (Adviser for international and foreign relations)

Council of Ministers

The prime minister is appointed by the PA president. The position of PA prime minister was created in 2003, in part due to international criticism of the then president, Yasser Arafat. Initially, prime ministers were Fatah members, reflecting the party's electoral majority in the PLC. However, since the international boycott of the 2006 Hamas government led by Ismail Haniyeh, the prime minister has been an independent 'technocratic' figure.

The cabinet is appointed by the prime minister and is responsible to the legislature (the PLC).

The PA government is currently headed by Prime Minister Rami Hamdallah and includes 20 ministers.

1. Rami Hamdallah (Prime Minister)
2. Ziad Abu Amr (Deputy Prime Minister)
3. Haifaa al-Agha (Minister for Women's Affairs)
4. Hussein Al-Araj (Minister for Local Government)
5. Jawad Awwad (Minister of Health)
6. Shukri Bishara (Minister of Finance and Planning)
7. Ehab Bseiso (Minister of Culture)
8. Ali Abu Diak (Minister of Justice)
9. Youssef Ed'iss (Minister for Religious Endowments (Awqaf) and Religious Affairs)
10. Mofeed al-Hasayneh (Minister for Public Works and Housing)
11. Adnan al-Husayni (Minister for Jerusalem Affairs)
12. Rula Maayah (Minister of Tourism and Antiquities)
13. Riyad al-Maliki (Foreign Minister)

14. Alam Moussa (Minister for Communications and Information Technology)

Palestinian Legislative Council (PLC)

The Palestine Legislative Council was created as part of the Oslo Accords as the legislative branch of the PA and is meant to represent Palestinians residing in OPT (i.e. Gaza, the West Bank, and East Jerusalem). The PLC approves the PA's budget, and can pass motions of no confidence against the PA (PA) government.

The PLC comprises 132 seats, based on a mixed electoral system by which 50 percent of seats are elected through the majority system (districts) and the other 50 percent of seats are elected through the proportional representation system (lists). Legislative elections have been held twice: in 1996 (won by Fatah) and 2006 (won by Hamas).

The current distribution of PLC seats is: Hamas "Change and Reform Bloc" (74); Fatah (45); PFLP (3); PNI (2); Third Way (2); DFLP (1); PPP (1); Independents (4). In theory, the current PLC's mandate expired in 2010.

As of December 2017 there were 10 PLC members imprisoned by Israel, the majority of them held without charge or trial – these include Khalida Jarrar (PFLP), Ahmad Sadaat (PFLP), and Marwan Bargouthi (Fatah). In December 2016 Abbas lifted parliamentary immunity from his Fatah rival and PLC member Mohammed Dahlan, along with four other PLC members seen to support him.

The PLC has not met in a regular session since the 2007 West Bank-Gaza split. With the PA legislative and oversight process effectively frozen, Mahmoud Abbas has increasingly ruled through presidential decrees.

The Hamas 'Change and Reform' bloc has continued to convene as the PLC in Gaza. A Change and Reform bloc meeting at the PLC in Gaza in August 2017 was attended by Fatah members opposed to Abbas splinter-group and led by Mohammed Dahlan (who appeared via video conference).

The protocols for holding of PLC elections – including in Jerusalem – are set out in Annex 2 of the 1995 Israeli-Palestinian interim agreement (Oslo II). According to the PA's Basic Law, the PLC's term limit is four years.

There are 132 members of the PLC, all of whom are automatically members of the PNC. A full list of PLC members can be found here. Key figures are listed below.

Justice system

The Palestinian justice system includes the Attorney-General's Office, the Bar Association, and a court system supervised and regulated by the High Judicial Council which nominates judges for approval by the president of the PA. The PA court system is composed of sharia courts, military courts, the Court of First Instance, Court of Conciliation, the Courts of Appeal, the High Court of Justice (which has primary jurisdiction over electoral matters), and the newly created High Constitutional Court (which interprets the Basic Law and legislative texts).

The Palestinian judiciary faces a number of challenges, including the intra-Palestinian split that has led to the development of a parallel justice system in Gaza under Hamas, as well as continued obstacles resulting from Israel's occupation and limited Palestinian sovereignty.

Constitutional Court

In what was seen as a largely political move to consolidate power, Mahmoud Abbas issued a decree in April 2016 creating a Constitutional Court composed of nine judges drawn predominantly from his Fatah supporters. Although the Constitutional Court was foreseen in the 2002 Basic Law, the timing and context of its activation is seen as a means of further constraining Abbas's rivals and potentially creating a mechanism to anoint a future successor to the PA presidency.

In October 2016, the Constitutional Court backed Abbas's decision to postpone municipal elections, ruling that these could no longer be held in Gaza given a lack of judicial "guarantees" from the Hamas-backed court system. In November 2016, the court once again ruled in Abbas's favour, upholding his authority to revoke the parliamentary immunity of his Fatah rival Mohammad Dahlan and of four of his supporters in the PLC.

Given its expansive powers, Abbas may attempt to use the Constitutional Court to rubber-stamp the creation of a PA vice-president that would take precedence over the PLC speaker (Hamas's Aziz Duwaik) in any post-Abbas succession process.

Elections

The PA has held presidential and legislative elections twice. The first were in 1996, when Yasser Arafat won the presidency and his party, Fatah, dominated the PLC. A presidential election was held once again in 2005 following Arafat's death, and was won by Mahmoud Abbas. Legislative elections for the PLC were held once again in 2006, at the urging of President Bush, and won by the Islamist group Hamas.

In addition, there have been three municipal elections since the PA's creation: in 2004-05 in both the West Bank and Gaza; and in 2012 and 2017 in the West Bank only, without the participation of several Palestinian factions, including Hamas.

PA elections (presidential, legislative, and municipal) are regulated by the 2007 Elections Law – a decree issued by Mahmoud Abbas. Since 2005 Palestinian elections have been administered by the independent Central Elections Commission (CEC). The CEC is led by nine Commissioners appointed through presidential decree.

Municipalities

Municipalities were once controlled and used by Israel as a means of administering its occupation until the formation of the Palestinian Authority (PA) in 1994. Prior to the establishment of the PA, Israel created what was known as the “Village Leagues” to administer the OPT through proxies. Leaders and members of these groups were largely seen as traitors by the Palestinian population and became a target for assassinations during the First Intifada.

After the PA's establishment, municipal elections became a significant arena for Palestinian political development. Municipal elections were held in 2004-05 in both the West Bank and Gaza – the first since 1976, and the first under the PA. Voting mostly followed party lines, but in some cases family and tribal relations also played a role. The second municipal elections were held only in the West Bank in 2012 without Hamas participation. The third municipal elections in 2017 – again held exclusively in the West Bank – saw lower participation and a shift away from factional politics. They highlighted internal divisions within Palestinian politics given the non-participation of Palestinian factions such as Hamas, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), and Fatah-aligned supporters of Mohammed Dahlan.

Hamas boycotted PA elections until 2005, when it participated and had great success in that year's municipal elections. But Hamas boycotted the 2017 municipal elections after the Supreme Court ruled that the Hamas-backed court system in Gaza did not have jurisdiction to rule on electoral matters – a crucial element in ensuring Hamas buy-in and prompting accusations that Abbas had ignored agreements reached by Palestinian factions in Beirut in January 2017.

Unions

Union mobilisation played a major role in the development of the Palestinian liberation movement since 1925, and has historically been a vehicle for Palestinian women and students to play a role in politics. They were weakened by the emergence of the PA and the decline of the PLO, in which they are represented. The split between West Bank and Gaza led to the creation of two separate bodies of unions. University student unions are dominated by factional politics, and elections for the unions often serve as indicators of the strength of the political parties as a whole.

4. Political actors

Fatah continues to be the dominant force within the PLO and PA, although the emergence of Hamas and its victory in the PLC elections in 2006 posed a serious challenge to Fatah and the PLO as a whole. The infighting between Fatah and Hamas in 2007 caused deep divisions within Palestinian politics. Although some Palestinians have been organising and operating outside or across these factional lines, politics is still largely determined by them. These factional lines are reflected to varying degrees within the PLO and the PA, in refugee camps, in Jerusalem, and in municipal and union elections.

PLO groups

There are 11 factions represented in the PLO. Fatah remains the largest and most dominant, followed by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP). Many of the other parties have lost their popular support base and contribute very little to politics today; in most cases, they have been reduced to a few aging figures who still hold positions within the PLO.

Fatah

Fatah is the Arabic acronym for the National Liberation Movement, a secular nationalist organisation established by Yasser Arafat and fellow activists, including Mahmoud Abbas, in the late 1950s. Arafat led the party until his death in 2004. Since Arafat's death, Fatah has been led by Mahmoud Abbas.

Fatah has experienced internal strife throughout its history in exile and at home. It effectively took control of the PA in 1996 and is widely viewed by Palestinians as corrupt. The party lost much of its position of dominance after Arafat's death and the loss of the 2006 parliamentary election to Hamas. Following the 2007 infighting, Fatah was left weakened in Gaza, and broken as a national movement.

The two main organs within Fatah are the Central Committee (the executive branch) and the Revolutionary Council (the legislative branch), both of which are elected by a General Conference. Fatah has held seven conferences throughout its history.

Dahlan and his supporters now operate through a new organisation called the Fatah Democratic Reform Movement.

Throughout its history Fatah has organised and perpetrated numerous attacks against Israeli military and civilian targets. In 1988, it was removed from the United States's list of terrorist organisations after it renounced terrorism.

General Congress

The Fatah General Congress is composed of approximately 1400 party members and elects both the Revolutionary Council (RC) and Central Committee (CC). The last Congress – Fatah's Seventh – was held in Ramallah in December 2016, electing a new RC and CC. This was largely seen as a move by Mahmoud Abbas to strengthen his grip on the party by ousting his rival Mohammed Dahlan and marginalising the popular Fatah figure Marwan Barghouti.

Revolutionary Council (RC)

The Revolutionary Council (RC) is Fatah's parliamentary body. It consists of 80 members elected by the Fatah General Congress, and sets policies through various committees. The RC is elected by the Fatah Congress made up of approximately 1400 party members.

Fatah held its seventh Congress in Ramallah in December 2016 which elected the current RC.

Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP)

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) is a revolutionary socialist party that was co-founded in 1967 by George Habash, Nayef Hawatmeh, and Ahmad Jibril, as an umbrella organisation for Marxist and Arab nationalist groups. It became the second largest faction, and the main opposition force to Fatah, within the PLO. It has been in decline since the 1980s following the collapse of the Soviet Union which had been its chief benefactor, and the emergence of non-PLO groups such as Hamas and Islamic Jihad.

The PFLP holds its General Conference in secret. It elects an unknown number, thought to be 18, members of the Political Bureau, most of whose identities are unknown. The last General Conference, held in 2014, re-elected Ahmad Sa'adat as secretary general.

The PFLP opposes serving in the PA government and has been critical of its policies, particularly regarding security coordination with Israel. The PFLP does not support the two-state solution and instead calls for the liberation of all of historical Palestine.

The PFLP has previously carried out attacks against Israeli targets, and is listed as a foreign terrorist organisation by the European Union and the United States.

Palestine Democratic Union (FIDA)

The Palestine Democratic Union (FIDA) is an offshoot of the DFLP; founded in 1990 by Yasser Abd Rabbo, and currently led by Saleh Ra'fat. FIDA is a social democratic reformist movement that advocates democracy, social justice and equality, and socialism, and supports Israeli-Palestinian reconciliation.

Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command (PFLP-GC)

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine - General Command (PFLP-GC) is headed by Ahmad Jibril; both organisation and leader are based in Syria. It is an offshoot of the PFLP, with a limited following among Palestinian refugees in Lebanon and Syria.

The group was involved in insurgent attacks against Israeli forces in southern Lebanon during the 1970s and 1980s. It is also allegedly responsible for the bombing of Swissair Flight SR330 in February 1970, as well as a number of attacks against Israeli civilians, including the Avivim school bus attack, in May 1970, which killed 9 children and 3 adults, and the attack on Kiryat Shmona in April 1974 which killed 18 (including 8 children). In November 1987, 2 PFLP-GC militants infiltrated Israel using hang-gliders from southern Lebanon and proceeded to kill 6 Israeli soldiers.

The party has strong links to the Syrian regime and reportedly took part in fighting against Syrian opposition forces. The PFLP-GC is opposed to peace with Israel and is designated a terrorist organisation by the United States and the European Union.

Palestinian People's Party (PPP)

Non-PLO groups

The PLO once dominated the Palestinian liberation movement, between its founding in 1964 and the eruption of the First Intifada in 1987. Since then, however, the PLO's leadership has been challenged by the emergence of non-PLO groups.

The 1980s saw the founding of groups, such as Hamas and Islamic Jihad (PIJ), which were heavily inspired by political Islam and the Muslim Brotherhood. These Islamist groups initially criticised the secular and leftist PLO over its compromises with Israel, in particular its renunciation of armed struggle and acceptance of a two-state solution based on only 22 per cent of "historic Palestine".

While they initially sought to replace the PLO as the dominant force within the Palestinian liberation movement, Hamas and PIJ have more recently indicated their desire to join the PLO in an effort to co-opt it from within. The past decade has also seen a more pragmatic line from Hamas, which is engaging in the Palestinian political process for the first time since the 2006 legislative election, and indicating its potential acceptance of a Palestinian state on the pre-June 1967 borders.

Recent years have also seen the emergence of a new crop of secular parties, such as the Palestinian National Initiative (al-Mubadara), seeking to present Palestinian voters with an alternative to either Fatah or Hamas. For now, however, these political initiatives have so far failed to attract broad-based popular support, or challenge the dominance of Fatah and Hamas in Palestinian politics. Although not formally part of the PLO, these parties and their representatives participate in PLO politics at all levels (the Palestinian National Council, Palestinian Central Council, and the Executive Committee).

Alongside this, the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT) and Palestinian refugee camps have seen the emergence of Salafi groups. Some, such as Hizb ut-Tahrir (which is predominant in the West Bank), continue to reject violence (and to a certain extent political participation). Others, such as Fatah al-Islam in Lebanon's Ain al-Hilweh refugee camp, or Jaysh al-Islam in Gaza, have adopted a more violent ideology based on religious struggle (jihad).

Hamas

The Islamic Resistance Movement Hamas was established during the start of the First Intifada in December 1987. It was founded by Sheikh Ahmad Yassin and other members of the Muslim Brotherhood in Palestine, who eventually turned Hamas into an autonomous organisation with its own charter and strategies. Hamas is described as a nationalist Islamist movement with political, military, and social branches. The party became Fatah's main rival and a strong opponent of the PA's policies.

The group carried out frequent suicide bombings against Israeli military and civilian targets between 1994-2004. Hamas is funded by Iran and is listed as a terrorist group by the United States and European Union. In addition, the European Union has put in place a "no contact" policy preventing its officials from engaging with members of Hamas.

Hamas ran a wide network of charitable, social, and welfare associations, but this infrastructure was significantly damaged by the PA in the West Bank following the 2007 infighting with Fatah. Its isolated rule of Gaza has also distanced the party from the Islamist grassroots in the West Bank, segments of which were filled by different and more radical groups.

The Hamas leadership is located both inside and outside of Palestine and is made up of a consultative Shura Council and a Politico Bureau (Politburo) responsible for decision-making. In addition, it has 'regional'-level Shuras and Politburos representing Hamas members in the West Bank, Gaza, the diaspora, and prisoners in Israeli jails. Despite its geographical spread, the Hamas leadership appears to be well organised and effective, capable of pursuing consistent policies and enforcing compliance with internal instructions.

Following the assassination of Sheikh Ahmad Yassin in Gaza in 2004, the movement's centre of power shifted to Hamas's Politburo, based first in Syria and then Qatar.

Following Politburo elections in 2017 and the election of a new Hamas leadership, the centre of power has returned to Gaza. In May 2017 Hamas published a revised political platform distancing itself from the Muslim Brotherhood, and potentially paving the way for its acceptance of a Palestinian state based on the pre-June 1967 borders.

Shura Council

The Shura Council is a consultative body that elects the Politburo. It is comprised of members from four 'regional' Shuras, elected by Hamas members in Gaza, the West Bank, the diaspora, and by prisoners in Israeli jails. These regional Shuras also appoint 'regional' Politburos for each area.

The Shuras were initially dominated by religious figures but now also include an unknown number of political and social figures. Membership of Hamas's Shuras is mostly kept secret.

Politburo

The Political Bureau (Politburo) is a decision-making body whose authority is derived from the support of the Shura Council. The Politburo determines social, political, and military policies, in consultation with the Shura Council.

The Politburo comprises 15 members elected by the Shura Council. It is currently headed by Ismail Haniyeh, who replaced Khaled Mashal in May 2017 following Politburo elections. In practice, though, Yahya Sinwar has assumed effective control over the movement.

In addition to the main Politburo, Hamas has 'regional' Politburos elected by four 'regional' Shuras, representing the West Bank, Gaza, the diaspora, and prisoners.

Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ)

Palestinian Islamic Jihad was founded in 1982 by students at the Islamic University in Gaza, although the name was formally adopted in 1987. It rose through the network of the Muslim Brotherhood in Palestine, but developed into a distinct organisation influenced more by Iran's Islamic Revolution. Its founder, Fathi Abd al-Aziz al-Shikaki, a physician from Rafah in the Gaza Strip, was assassinated in Malta in 1995 in retaliation to a double suicide bombing by PIJ against Israeli soldiers at Beit Lid Junction in Israel. PIJ suicide bombings against Israeli civilian targets continued until 2007.

Islamic Jihad acts as an elite vanguard rather than a broad community-based movement and is opposed to political engagement with Israel. While Islamic Jihad is sharply critical of the PA and its policies, it does not participate in politics and limits its role to military confrontation with Israel; however, it once had representatives participating in PLO Central Council meetings. It is thought to have good working relations with Egyptian intelligence. PIJ has supported intra-Palestinian reconciliation efforts between Hamas and Fatah.

The organisation upholds a secretive and ostensibly disciplined cell-based structure.

1. Ramadan Shalah (Secretary General)
2. Ziyad al-Nakhalah (Deputy Secretary General)
3. Khaled al-Batsh (Gaza leader)

Popular Resistance Committees (PRC)

The Popular Resistance Committees (PRC) were formed during the Second Intifada in Gaza by members of Fatah who became opposed to the PA and its policies. It is currently led by Abu Yasser Shashnyeh. The PRC are strong allies of Hamas and Islamic Jihad and do not participate in the politics of the PA or the PLO. There seems to be little difference between its political branch and armed wing (al-Nasser Salah al-Din Brigades). Israel accuses Iran of supporting and funding the PRC.

Palestinian National Initiative (PNI)

The Palestinian National Initiative (PNI) – al-Mubadara in Arabic – describes itself as a democratic movement of non-violent resistance to the occupation. It supports peace with Israel based on a two-state solution, and the right of return for refugees. It was co-founded by Haidar Abdel-Shafi, Edward Said, Ibrahim Dakkak, and Mustafa Barghouti (the PNI's current leader). The PNI has consultative party status in the Socialist International, and is a founding member of the Progressive Alliance.

Hizb ut-Tahrir (HuT)

Hizb ut-Tahrir, founded in 1953 in Jerusalem, is a global pan-Islamic Salafi movement. Its Palestinian branch includes hundreds of members who have been repressed by the PA in the West Bank. Their organisation has recently been limited to activities of supporters among students in universities. Hizbu Al Tahrir does not participate in PA or PLO politics but instead works on the re-establishment of the caliphate through non-military means.

Harakat al-Sabareen (HaS)

Harakat Al-Sabireen was founded in 2014 by Hisham Salim and other former members of Islamic Jihad. Although founded in Gaza, it also operates in the West Bank. The movement is reported to have strong and direct ties to Iran.

In January 2018, the United States imposed sanctions on the movement as Specially Designated Global Terrorists \(SDGTs\), accusing it of having “planned and executed terrorist attacks include firing rockets into Israel in September 2015 and detonating an explosive device targeting an Israeli army patrol in December 2015”.

5. Armed groups

Most Palestinian political parties have armed wings, though the structural and organisational relationship between the two institutions in each party is not always clear.

Following 2007 infighting, PA security forces targeted Hamas’s social and military infrastructure in the West Bank. The security campaign launched under the banner of “one arm, one authority” also targeted Fatah activists critical of the PA leadership. The PA security forces’ policies towards armed groups have been criticised by politicians and activists for criminalising resistance.

In Gaza, Hamas’s al-Qassam Brigades have developed exponentially, while other groups have been allowed to maintain their armed wings and new groups such as Salafi-jihadists have grown.

Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (IQB) – Hamas

The Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (IQB) was founded in 1991 as the military wing of Hamas. It is the largest and best-equipped group operating in Gaza today. In recent years, IQB developed its missile and rocket capacity in addition to its internal security force (al-Majd). IQB has claimed responsibility for many attacks against Israeli civilians, including suicide bombings. IQB is led by Mohammed Deif. Its deputy is Marwan Issa.

1. Mohammed Deif (Commander)
2. Marwan Issa (Deputy Commander)

Al-Quds Brigades (AOB) – Islamic Jihad

Al-Quds Brigades (QB) was founded in 1992 as the armed wing of Islamic Jihad. Following Israel's assassination of the organisation's secretary general Fathi al-Shikaki in 1995, QB carried out attacks against Israeli civilians jointly with Hamas and IQB. It is the second-largest armed group in Gaza after IQB.

Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades (AMB) – Fatah

Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades (AMB) emerged during the Second Intifada as a loose network of military groups associated with Fatah, largely initiated by activists from the Balata refugee camp near Nablus. Although it was never officially recognised or openly backed by Fatah, many Fatah leaders have maintained an ambiguous relationship with the AMB.

The AMB claims to be a continuity of “The Storm” (al-'Asifah) and “Fatah Hawks” (Suqoor Fatah), armed groups which were absorbed into the PA's security forces. However, many of its members were young activists who were part of the Tanzim, a grassroots organisation of Fatah activists that was led by Marwan Barghouti, who Israel claims also led the AMB. The group carried out suicide attacks against Israeli targets between 2001-2007.

Most of the AMB's leaders have been captured or killed by Israel. In 2010, the remaining activists reached a deal with Israel through the PA to be removed from the wanted list in return for renouncing violence and surrendering their weapons to the PA. Many of these activists were absorbed into the PA security forces; others kept their weapons and were targeted by the PA. Others went on to form splinter groups such as the Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades-Nidal al-Amoudi Division and the Popular Resistance Committees (PRC) in Gaza.

During the Second Intifada, the AMB carried out numerous operations against Israeli soldiers and settlers in the West Bank and Gaza, as well as suicide attacks on civilians inside Israel.

Al-Nasser Salah al-Deen Brigades – PRC

The armed wing of the Popular Resistance Committees is the al-Nasser Salah al-Din Brigades – although in practice there seems to be little difference between the two.

The Brigades were formed by members of the al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades (AMB) in Gaza. They are the third largest armed group in Gaza after Hamas's Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (IQB) and Islamic Jihad's Al-Quds Brigades (AOB).

The al-Nasser Salah al-Deen Brigades/PRC coordinate closely with Hamas and contribute personnel to the Gaza police force. They have participated in joint military operations with IQB, including the capture and holding of Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit in 2006. They are thought to be behind a minority of the rocket fire from Gaza witnessed in early 2017, as well as the 17 February 2017 IED attack on IDF soldiers on the Gaza border. Israel accuses Iran of supporting and funding the PRC.

Abu Ali Mustafa Brigades – PFLP

The Abu Ali Mustafa Brigades are the armed wing of the PFLP. They function in both the West Bank and Gaza. One of their notable operations was the assassination of Israeli minister of agriculture Rehavam Ze'evi in October 2001.

National Resistance Brigades – DFLP

The National Resistance Brigades are the military wing of the DFLP and operate in Gaza.

Salafi-Jihadis

A small number of different Salafi-jihadi groups formed following Hamas's seizure of the Gaza strip in 2007. Some of these groups were formed by disgruntled Hamas members who had grown increasingly critical of what they saw as softening of positions towards Israel. Other groups were formed by clans as way a of gaining political legitimacy.

Salafi-jihadi groups have only a marginal presence and are held in a choke-hold by Hamas. Nevertheless, Israeli-imposed closures on the Strip and consecutive military offensives have radicalised them and helped create a fertile recruiting ground in Gaza. Although responsible for occasional rocket fire against Israel in defiance of the ceasefire between Palestinian armed groups and Israel, these groups have more often attacked Hamas, including through the use of suicide bombings and assassinations.

The four main active groups in Gaza are: Jund Ansar Allah, Jaysh al-Islam, Jaysh al-Umma, and al-Tawhid wal-Jihad. These groups are known to cooperate with Egyptian Salafi-Jihadi groups active in the Sinai.

Lebanon's refugee camps have, meanwhile, seen the growth of Salafi-jihadist factions which regularly clash with other Palestinian groups such as Fatah.

Jund Ansar Allah

Jund Ansar Allah is a Salafi-jihadi group active in Gaza that pledged allegiance to al-Qaeda. It first came to prominence in June 2009 when its members attacked Israeli security forces on horseback at the Karni border crossing. Two months later, the group's then leader, Latif Moussa, declared an "Islamic Emirate" in the Gaza Strip from his mosque in Rafah. The ensuing two-day gun battle with Hamas security forces resulted in the death of 22 people, including six Hamas members and Latif Moussa. The group has criticised Hamas for not imposing Sharia law and it is thought that its members previously fought in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Al-Tawhid wal-Jihad

Al-Tawhid wal-Jihad is a Salafi-jihadi group active in Gaza since 2008, inspired by al-Qaeda. The group is believed to be behind the abduction and killing of Italian peace activist Vittorio Arrigoni in 2011 along with repeated rocket fire and IED attacks against Israeli forces. It is thought to have close ties with the Sinai-based Islamic State group-affiliate Ansar Bait al-Maqdis. Al-Tawhid wal-Jihad was founded by Hisham Ali Saidani who fought with al-Qaeda in Iraq following the US-led invasion. Saidani was killed in October 2013 by an Israeli missile strike in the Jabaliyya refugee camp.

Jaysh al-Umma

Jaysh al-Umma is an al-Qaeda-inspired Salafi-jihadi group which emerged in 2008 in Khan Younis (Gaza). The group is responsible for rocket fire against Israel and is thought to have been active fighting Israeli forces during the 2012 and 2014 Gaza wars. It has reportedly warned about Iranian influence in the Gaza Strip and criticised Hamas for not applying Sharia law.

Jaysh al-Islam

Jaysh al-Islam is a Salafi-jihadi group founded between 2005-2006 in Gaza, and is thought to have splintered from Hamas. The group has carried out rocket attacks against Israel, and is accused of kidnapping two Fox News journalists, and carrying out attacks in Cairo. Analysts have also linked the group to the abduction of Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit in 2006 and BBC reporter Alan Johnston in 2007. As of 2015 the group was led by Mumtaz Durmush – both figure on the US terrorist list. In 2015, Jaysh al-Islam shifted its allegiance from al-Qaeda to the Islamic State group. It has criticised Hamas “for oppressing Muslims and working for the “interests of the Jews.”” At least one member of the group is reported to have died fighting in Syria.

Fatah al-Islam (Lebanon)

Fatah al-Islam is a Salafi-Jihadist offshoot of Fatah which first appeared in the north Lebanese Palestinian refugee camp of Nahr al-Bared in 2006. The Lebanese government has linked the group to Syrian intelligence. According to Reuters, the group was founded by Shaker al-Abssi with the aim of “reform[ing] the Palestinian refugee community in Lebanon according to Islamic sharia law before confronting Israel”. Since al-Abssi’s death, the group has reportedly been led by Bilal Badr who is now reportedly in Syria’s Idlib province with the former al-Qaeda affiliate Hayat Tahrir al-Sham.

Between May and September 2007 Fatah al-Islam engaged in sustained clashes with Lebanese Armed Forces in Nahr al-Bared, ultimately leading to the group’s defeat and relocation to the Ain al-Hilweh refugee camp near Sidon.

6. Security forces

Today, there are over 83,000 security personnel in the West Bank and Gaza combined, forming one of the highest ratios of security personnel to civilians in the world. In both areas, the security forces have become authoritarian tools used by Palestinian leaderships to control and limit political participation and silence freedom of expression.

Several laws, including the Basic Law, and executive decrees are in place to regulate the security forces, yet in practice these act largely without accountability. PA security forces continue to perpetrate human rights violations including arbitrary detention, torture, and use of excessive force. In the West Bank, many Palestinians therefore perceive the PA security forces as agents of the Israeli occupation

The 1994 Gaza-Jericho Agreement, signed in Cairo, specified the creation of a Palestinian police force which formed the basis of today’s Palestinian security forces. There were three major phases in the development of these forces.

The first phase saw a proliferation of forces beyond what was stipulated in the agreement, such as in the Preventive Security Force, and the morphing of PLO security bodies into PA institutions, such as the General Intelligence Service. During this period, members of these forces were largely drawn from members and supporters of Fatah.

The second phase began with the Second Intifada and the destruction of the Palestinian security infrastructure by Israel. After Hamas's election win in 2006 and the internal fighting that ensued the following year, the Fatah-dominated PA forces were driven out of Gaza and replaced with newly established Hamas forces. Two separate security regimes were thus created – an issue which remains one of the most challenging in Palestinian national reconciliation efforts.

The third phase came following the Second Intifada and the resumption of peace negotiations with Israel. In this ongoing phase the PA's Western-backed security forces in the West Bank coordinate closely with Israel.

In 2005, the European Union established the Coordinating Office for Palestinian Police Support (EUPOL COPPS) and the United States set up the office of the Security Coordinator (USSC). Both bodies became the two main mechanisms for international support towards the Palestinian security sector. But despite the extensive foreign-funded Palestinian securitisation programme, Palestinians remain widely exposed to violence by Israeli forces and settlers.

In Gaza, Hamas's rapidly upgraded security forces also faced massive destruction through three consecutive Israeli military operations, in which security personnel and infrastructure were targeted.

General Intelligence Service (GIS)

The Palestinian General Intelligence Service (GIS) falls under the direct command of the PA president. Its structure and organisation replicate those of the PLO's intelligence forces before the creation of the PA. It collects intelligence, counters espionage, cooperates with foreign intelligence services, and commands a paramilitary force. Its members wear plain clothes and carry out both covert and public operations. The head of the service holds the rank of PA minister.

The GIS is very powerful and has been used to target political opponents and dissenting activists. It is led by Major General Majed Faraj.

1. Majed Faraj (Head)

Preventive Security (PS)

The Preventive Security (PS) is an internal intelligence agency that was established to counter opposition to the PLO's peace agreements with Israel, especially Hamas. The PS operates under the Ministry of Interior, but also appears to report directly to the president. It has grown to become one of the most powerful security forces.

In Gaza, the agency was led by Mohammed Dahlan until he and his forces were driven out by Hamas in 2007. Jibril Rajoub, a powerful member of the Fatah Central Committee, headed the organisation in the West Bank until he was removed by Yasser Arafat in 2002. The PS is currently led by Major General Ziad Hab al-Reeh, appointed by Yasser Arafat in 2003.

The PS works closely with the American CIA; in 2007, the PS in Gaza was supported by the CIA to retake control from Hamas by force. It also coordinates closely with Israel's Internal Security Agency in arresting, interrogating, and sometimes torturing Palestinians who are then arrested by Israel.

In 2005, following Arafat's death, and as part of the security sector reform process, the PS's 'Security and Protection Department', or the so-called 'Death Squad', was dismantled.

1. General Ziad Hab al-Reeh (Head)

National Security Forces (NSF)

The National Security Forces (NSF) is the successor organisation to the Palestine Liberation Army (PLA), once the PLO's military in exile, and is often described as Palestine's army-in-waiting. It initially recruited most of its personnel from the PLA and gradually added local recruits. Its current role is to support other security forces. The NSF in the West Bank has been led by Major General Nidal Abu Dukhan since 2011. In Gaza, the NSF has been led by Brigadier General Naim Al-Ghoul since 2015.

The NSF is made up of two departments: Military Intelligence and Military Liaison.

1. Nidal Abu Dukhan (Head of the PA's NSF)
2. Naim al-Ghoul (Head of Hamas's NSF)

Military Intelligence

Military Intelligence is responsible for collecting intelligence on the external military environment, but in practice operates as an internal security organisation to repress opposition within Fatah, including those serving in other security forces.

1. Zakaria Misleh (Head)

Military Liaison

Military Liaison is the official body responsible for security coordination with Israel through its District Coordination Offices (DCO). It conducts joint Palestinian patrols with the Israeli army until the Second Intifada. As other Palestinian security organs coordinated more directly with Israel, such as the PS and GI, the Military Liaison's function was reduced to the coordination of day-to-day civil matters.

1. Jihad Jayyousi (Head)

Presidential Guard

The Presidential Guard operates outside the NSF and reports directly to the president. It is an elite force with a mandate that includes personal protection to the president, counter-insurgency, and rapid intervention tasks. The Presidential Guard has nominally assumed control of the Rafah crossing with Egypt as stipulated in the national reconciliation talks sponsored by Egypt. It is currently led by Major General Munir al-Zoabi.

1. Munir al-Zoabi

Security and Protection Unit (Hamas)

After its takeover of Gaza in 2007, Hamas established the Security and Protection Unit, which took over the security infrastructure of the PA's Presidential Guard.

Civil Police

The Civil Police is split between the PA-controlled West Bank and Hamas-controlled Gaza.

In Area A of the West Bank, the Civil Police is the PA's main law enforcement apparatus. It handles ordinary police functions such as combating crime and upholding public order, and is also in charge of the PA's prisons. The Civil Police has various sub-branches including criminal investigation, drug enforcement, public order, traffic, emergency response, and women's police.

In Gaza, the Civil Police force is made up of members of the armed wings of Hamas and the Popular Resistance Committees (PRC), as well as members of smaller factions in Gaza.

The Gaza police force was initially known as the Executive Force, which was formed in 2007 by order of the Minister of Interior under the National Unity Government (the minister, Said Seyam, was assassinated by Israel during the 2008-09 military offensive). The Executive Force had allowed Hamas to administer executive power after Fatah security forces refused to work under the government's authority. The dispute was a precursor to the Fatah-Hamas fighting in 2007.

The police in the West Bank is headed by Major General Hazem Atallah. The police in Gaza is headed by Major General Tayseer al-Batch.

2. Tayseer al-Batch (Hamas Head)

Internal Security Force (ISF)

The Internal Security Force (ISF) is the intelligence organisation of the Hamas government, operating under the Ministry of Interior. It is made up of members of the al-Majd internal security force within the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (IQB), and is responsible for espionage and informants. It has been a force against dissent and political opposition.

The force is made up of two bodies: the Internal Security Agency (ISA), led by Sami Oudeh; and the newly established General Intelligence, led by Sami Nofal. The overall leader of the ISF is Major General Tawfiq Naim.

7. Civil society

Since 1948 Palestinian political agency has been expressed through grassroots organising predominantly in the refugee camps. Grassroots activism played the most significant role in the First intifada, with Palestinians mobilising in acts of civil disobedience, boycotts, and demonstrations.

The establishment of the PA has seen a proliferation of non-governmental organisations that receive funding from international donors. Today many civil society organisations focus on development-related issues, and some fill in gaps left by the PA in terms of services. Extensive foreign funding has led to criticism of both the “NGO-isation” of Palestinian civil society and of the international support to NGOs, which has been described as serving a political agenda. Development of Palestinian civil society in East Jerusalem has, meanwhile, been severely restricted by Israel.

Palestinian civil society has coalesced around a joint call made in 2005 to boycott, divest from, and sanction Israel. Today the Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions Movement (BDS) has wide local and international support and is seen, and fought, by Israel as a strategic threat.

Additionally, grassroots groups known as Popular Resistance Committees (not to be confused with the PRC group in Gaza) remain at the forefront of resisting Israel’s land grab policies through direct non-violent action and protests, including against the construction of Israel’s West Bank separation wall and the settlements. Grassroots mobilisation has also been led by youth on issues such as national reconciliation, electricity cuts in Gaza, and Israel’s regime of segregation and closure in Hebron.

Palestinian human rights organisations play a significant role in the documentation of Israeli violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, but they also play a crucial role in monitoring the practices of the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza.

Palestinian human rights groups have come together under the Palestinian Human Rights Organisations Council \(PHROC\) to speak on important and strategic human rights issues. Meanwhile, Palestinian humanitarian/developmental organisations have coordinated through the Palestinian Non-Governmental Organisations Network \(PNGO\).

Yet, despite well-rooted civil society organisations with a strong human rights component, growing authoritarian trends by Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza – coupled with regular arrests and crackdowns by Israeli forces – increasingly limit the space for civil society participation.

9. Profiles

Mahmoud Abbas

President of the PA; Chairman of the PLO’s Executive Committee; Chairman of Fatah’s Central Committee (Fatah)

Mahmoud Abbas, born in 1935 in Safed (present-day Israel), is one of the original co-founders of Fatah. He is the head of Fatah, the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), and the Palestinian Authority (PA). Abbas served as the first prime minister of the PA in 2003 but soon resigned due to political frustrations with Arafat, Israel, and the United States.

Following Yasser Arafat's death in November 2004, Abbas was elected as chairman of both Fatah's Central Committee (CC), and the PLO's Executive Committee (EC). In January 2005, he was also elected as president of the PA with 62 percent of the vote. In theory, Abbas's four-year presidential mandate expired in 2009.

Abbas announced his resignation as EC chairman and the head of the PLO in August 2015. This has yet to take effect, due in part to the inability of the Palestinian National Council (PNC) to convene in order to elect a new EC.

Over recent years there have been growing concerns over Abbas's deteriorating health, partly resulting from heavy smoking. In February 2018 he was briefly hospitalised in the US for medical checks.

Abbas is a long-time proponent of political dialogue with Israel as opposed to military confrontation, and is regarded as one of the main architects of the Oslo peace process. He previously served as the head of the PLO's department for national and international relations in 1980. He initiated contacts with Jewish and pacifist groups in Israel as far back as the 1970s, and headed the Palestinian negotiating team that created the Oslo Accords in 1993. In 2011, Abbas oversaw Palestine's successful application to be recognised as a state at the United Nations General Assembly.

As chairman of Fatah, Abbas has been criticised for filling the CC with close allies, and forcing out rivals like Mohammed Dahlan and Farouk Kaddoumi. As PA president, following the Fatah-Hamas split in 2007, he has been accused of eroding democratic institutions, weakening the judiciary, and entrenching the PA's authoritarian policies. As PLO chairman, he has kept a tight grip over the EC, marginalised non-Fatah parties, and neglected the PLO's ties to the Palestinian refugee camps.

PA Minister for Women's Affairs

Haifaa al-Agha was appointed minister of women's affairs in 2014. She previously worked at al-Aqsa University in Gaza and has held several positions in previous governments, including in the ministry of health. Al-Ahmad was the chairman of the General Union of Palestinian Students (GUPS) from 1971 to 1974. He was the PLO's representative to Iraq from 1979 to 1994, and became a member of the Fatah Revolutionary Council in 1989. Upon returning to the West Bank after the Oslo Accords, al-Ahmad was elected to the PLC and later became chairman of Fatah's parliamentary bloc. He is considered a leading candidate to succeed Mahmoud Abbas. He is a proponent of peaceful and popular resistance, including through demonstrations and boycotting Israeli products, though in the past he advocated and engaged in armed resistance.

After being imprisoned for three years and deported to Jordan by the Israeli army after the 1967 war, Aloul joined Fatah, where he became a top adviser to Yasser Arafat and Fatah deputy leader Khalil al-Wazir (Abu Jihad), as well as a commander in Fatah's military wing in Jordan and then Lebanon. Despite initial opposition from Israel, Aloul was allowed to return to the Occupied Palestinian Territory in 1995. During the First Intifada, Marwan Barghouti was a student leader at Birzeit University involved in popular protests. During the Second Intifada, he led Fatah's Tanzim faction and directed military attacks against Israeli targets. Barghouti was arrested and sentenced by an Israeli military court in 2002 to five consecutive life sentences for orchestrating attacks on Israelis.

Since his imprisonment, Barghouti has been active in the prisoners' movement and has published various articles from prison to communicate with the outside world. In 2012, he moved to the West Bank where he worked in the media department at Birzeit University before joining the government's media centre.

Mohammad Dahlan

Member of the PLC (Fatah - Democratic Reform Bloc)

Mohammad Dahlan was elected to Fatah's Central Committee in 2009, but increased tensions with Abbas led to his expulsion from Fatah in 2011. He remains a member of the Palestinian Legislative Council (PLC), for Khan Younis, serving since 2006, although Abbas stripped him of his parliamentary immunity in 2016. The same month, he was convicted by the PA's Anti-Corruption Crimes Court of embezzling $16m and was sentenced in absentia to three years in prison.

Dahlan retains a small and localised support base in Gaza, particularly in his hometown of Khan Younis, and among groups that received financial or other aid from him or through the Palestinian Centre for Human Perseverance (FATA) which his wife, Jalila Dahlan, heads. He is also thought to have support from armed groups in the West Bank refugee camps in Balata and Jenin.

Since his ousting by Abbas, Dahlan has lived in exile. He is currently based in the United Arab Emirates where serves as an adviser with a security-focused portfolio for Abu Dhabi prince Mohammad Bin Zayed. He has reportedly also acquired Serbian nationality. During this time he has created a profile for himself as an influential yet polarising regional player. He is considered close to Egyptian president Abdel Fattah al-Sisi, and has led Egyptian diplomatic missions, including negotiations for a dam project on the Nile river with Ethiopia and Sudan. He has also been accused of acting as a middleman to funnel weapons to UAE-backed militias in Libya.

Throughout this time, Dahlan has allegedly maintained strong links to the Israeli security establishment and political leaders, including minister of defence and right-wing politician Avigdor Lieberman. More recently, he has been using his strong relations with regional powers to insert himself back into Palestinian politics. This reportedly included a three-way deal with the Egyptian government and Hamas which would allow him to make a political return to the Gaza Strip.

Born in 1961, Dahlan grew up in Khan Younis refugee camp and was a founding member and leader of Fatah's al-Shabiba, the youth arm of the party, which played a significant role in the First Intifada. Following the signing of the Oslo Accords in 1993, he was appointed to head the Preventive Security (PS) in Gaza with a mandate to suppress local opposition to the PLO. By the mid-1990s, Dahlan commanded a well-organised force of about 20,000 members, giving him great powers within Gaza and strong relations with Israeli, American, and regional intelligence agencies. His forces were accused of committing grave human rights violations at the time, mainly against members of Hamas, including arbitrary arrests and torture and the killing of protestors on 18 November 1994.

By the time of the Second Intifada, Dahlan had established himself as a trusted partner of the Israeli security establishment and began to pose a direct challenge to Yasser Arafat. In 2001, he made public calls to reform the PA and resigned from his post as security chief in protest against what he said was the corruption of Arafat's rule. For some, Dahlan was emerging as the figurehead of Fatah's New Guard; others viewed him as a traitor conspiring against the Palestinian leader to end the Intifada.

In 2003 he served as short-lived minister of state and security affairs under then prime minister Mahmoud Abbas until the latter's resignation. Following Arafat's death in November 2004, Dahlan was reappointed by Abbas (now president), this time as minister of civil affairs, directly responsible for coordination with Israel – a position he held until the 2006 PLC legislative elections.

Between 2006-2007, as head of the National Security Council Dahlan, reportedly led preparations for a US-backed military effort by Fatah security forces – in particular PS – to overthrow the Hamas government in Gaza. This was pre-empted by a Hamas coup in June 2006 and resulted in the Islamist movement seizing full control of the Strip following bloody clashes. At that time, Dahlan fled to the West Bank but fell out with Abbas and other Fatah leaders, who blamed him for the Gaza debacle.

Mohammed Deif

Commander of the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (IQB)

Mohammed Deif, born in Gaza in 1965, is a founding member and commander of the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (IQB). While recovering from his injuries, Deif was replaced as IQB head by Ahmad Jabari, who was assassinated by Israel in November 2012. He was listed as a Specially Designated Global Terrorist (SDGT) by the US Department of State.
